EDITORIAL

Is Super China Going for a Right Way?

Trade is an efficient means of communication in human society. It is not just an exchange of goods, but also sharing mind and culture. Chinese people have been regarded as top businessmen since ancient times. Their commercialism was more than transaction; its essence was the trade of credit and trust on a long term basis. China has a huge territory with the largest population in the world. While sharing borders with many countries, its national interest with neighbors is highly complicated and dynamic. In this regard, China must have more ability for communication with flexibility and an open mind. If depending on a "China First" policy with hegemonic power, it will be isolated in the end. No one knows himself without a mirror. China is not an exception. It needs something to reflect itself in an objective manner. CHINA AND WTO REVIEW's academic activities will have significance in shedding light on the right way that China should go.

Volume 4, Number 1 of CWR discusses various questions and ideas for China's current and future trade and investment. This issue truly represents the global perspectives on Super China, including authors from the Czech Republic, Iran, Iraq, Korea, Pakistan, the US as well as China. Each section delivers academic papers and reports with critical points of theory and practice. Moreover, the newly established section <WTO Forum> introduces an institution for WTO research and practice in China. Readers can know details on the School of Trade Negotiation and WTO Chair Program at the SUIBE.

CHINA AND WTO REVIEW is published semi-annually. Submissions will be accepted on a rolling basis. CWR is an internationally refereed scholarly journal; each volume thus undergoes a vigorous peer review selection process. Drafts containing provocative, timely and creative legal and policy ideas on China and WTO-related issues will be preferred. More details may be found at: http://cwr.yiil.org

Seok Sik Jang
Mentor & Counselor of CWR